From the book Giants:

"The traditions of peoples all over the world are quite unanimous in asserting that in an earlier time a race of giants lived on the earth, that most of the race were destroyed in great catastrophes; that they were of cruel nature and were furiously fighting among themselves; that the last of them were exterminated when after a cataclysm a migration of peoples brought the forebears of the peoples of today to their new homelands.

The Japanese narrate that when their forefathers after a great catastrophe about two and a half or three thousand years ago, came from the continent and invaded the isles, they found there long-legged, furry giants. These giants were called Ainu. The forefathers of the Japanese were defeated in the first encounter, but in the second encounter they were victorious."

If this was indeed the skeletal remains of a human being, then the person would have stood at an estimated 38.4 feet (1,172 cm) tall. Interestingly Aloeus, the son of Poseidon and Canace of ancient Greek mythology had two sons, each of them were 27 cubits (40.5 feet) tall.

Giants in History

Oliver Van Noort, the first Dutchman to attempt a voyage round the world, between the years 1598 and 1601, gives the account of the inhabitants of these parts "He went up the river at Port Desire, and going on shore, found beasts like stags and buffaloes, also some savages, who, he says, were tall portly men, painted and armed with short bows and arrows, that were headed with stone.

Philodemos of Gadara and the Giants of Crete, 100 BC.

(Above left) Gaius Julius Solinus, Latin grammarian and compiler, scholar Theodor Mommsen dates him to the middle of the third century. He was the author of De mirabilibus mundi ('The wonders of the world') which circulated both under the title Collectanea rerum memorabilium ('Collection of Curiosities'), and Polyhistor; but the latter title was favoured by the author.

During the Roman war against the Cretan pirates (106-66 BC), a tremendous thunderstorm caused rivers to flood. After the high waters receded, says the ancient historian Gaius Julius Solinus, the river banks collapsed, laying bare a skeleton said to measure 33 cubits (49.5 feet). Word reached the Roman commanders Metellus Creticus and Lucius Flaccus, who broke from their conflict with the pirates to investigate this marvel for themselves.

Augustus Caesar's 'Roman Mystery Museum' 30 BC

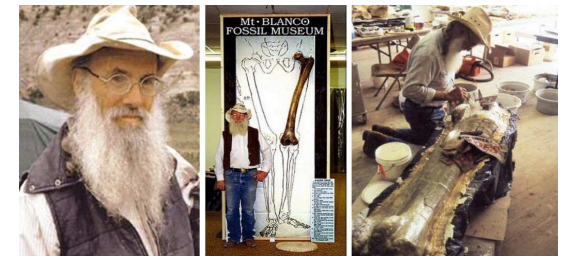

(Above left) Augustus was born Gaius Octavius on 23 September 63 BC in Rome. In 43 BC his greatuncle, Julius Caesar, was assassinated and in his will, Octavius, known as Octavian, was named as his heir. He fought to avenge Caesar and in 31 BC defeated Antony and Cleopatra at the Battle of Actium. He was then the undisputed ruler of Rome. (Above right) Artist's reconstruction of Augustus Caesar's 'Roman Mystery Museum' showing the skeleton of a giant hero as its centrepiece.

When he became Emperor of Rome, Augustus Caesar (63 BC-14 AD) established the world's first palaeontological museum at his villa on the island of Capri. It housed a collection of the bones of immense monsters of land and sea. According to some texts the main hall of Augustus's museum had a centre piece which set it apart from any other in history, apparently boasting the skeletal remains of a one hundred foot tall Titan along with the weapons of the ancient heroes.

Giant Skeletons Found in the late 1950s In South East Turkey

During road construction in Homs in the Euphrates Valley of south-east Turkey, many tombs, each one 4 meters long and containing the remains of giants were uncovered. At the sites the leg bones were measured to be 120 cms (47.24 inches). Joe Taylor, Director of Mt. Blanco Fossil Museum, was commissioned to make a replica of the human femur. These people were estimated to have stood some 14 to 16 feet tall.

Another discovery made by the archaeologist Ron Wyatt, was a giant thumb bone found in the lesser mounts of Ararat near Noah's Ark, Eastern Turkey in 1982.

(Above left) shows a normal human thumb bone from an adult male of 6 feet tall with the large thumb bone shown below. (Above right) the large thumb bone measures 3.6 inches, the thumb bone from the 6 foot tall adult measures 1.5 inches. Estimates are that the giant thumb bone belonged to a person who would have stood at around 12 feet tall.
